

DATABASES FOR COUNSELING

APA PSYCINFO

APA Psycinfo is the main database in the field of psychology, and it covers clinical psychology and counseling very well. So every counselor should be familiar with this database. For example, as of January 2024, a search for retrieves 156,590 records with 17,952 links to available online content. Psycinfo does not natively provide the online content of the articles. Instead, it links to articles from other sources. Our instance of Psycinfo does not reliably show links to articles from other sources/vendors. Mostly it links to open access articles. To provide access to additional online content, consider the following alternative databases.

<<SU("major depressive disorder" OR "major depression") >>

GALE ACADEMIC ONEFILE

Onefile covers many topics including psychology and psychiatry. Pick Advanced Search so you can specifically search metadata subject fields. As of January 2024, a search of the subject field for << "depression mood disorder" >> retrieves 98,865 peer reviewed articles with 26,763 links to available online content. When you display a full record, Gale automatically displays a butchered plain text version of the article which lacks formatting, lacks non-English characters, lacks tables and charts, and lacks pagination. But you can download a complete properly formatted pdf by clicking the download PubMed covers technical medical literature with extensive coverage of psychiatry. You will continue to have access after you graduate. As of January 2024, a search for ("major depressive disorder" OR "major depression")[sb] retrieves 67,586 records with 25,196 links to free online content, and 38,152 links to paywalled content (most of which we don't have a license for), for a total of 63,348 links.
